The image shows a close-up of a terrazzo tile surface. It features a light-colored, off-white or cream base matrix. Embedded throughout this matrix are numerous irregular, angular fragments of various stones and minerals. The colors of these fragments include shades of grey, black, light blue, dark blue, brown, tan, and a prominent bright orange. The fragments vary in size, with some being quite large and others being small specks. The overall effect is a dense, speckled, and textured appearance characteristic of traditional terrazzo.
